Forlimpopoli is located on the Via Emilia halfway between Forlì and Cesena. In virtue of its geographic position, between the sea and the hills, it preserves its vocation for craftsmanship and trade.

A brief history It was destroyed several times, first by the Longobards and then by Cardinal Albornoz in 1300. Despite this its inhabitants have always found renewed strength to rebuild the town and help it to prosper by exploiting their resources and inborn sense of hospitality.

People, works of art and monuments The most recent history of Forlimpopoli is linked to two famous and very different people. The first one is the famous bandit Stefano Pelloni known as Passatore who raided the Verdi Theatre inside the Fortress that dominates the old town robbing the citizens who were there. The second one is Pellegrino Artusi, the famous Italian gastronome, who was born in Forlimpopoli and here enjoyed experimenting in cookery. The book "La scienza in cucina e l'arte di mangiar bene" (the science of cooking and the art of eating well) published more than a hundred years ago is still today the work that unites Italy from a cookery point of view. Indeed, the reference point for food lovers from all over the world is here: Casa Artusi, a centre of food culture dedicated to Italian home cooking. Close to it there is the charming Church of the Servi, with a streamlined shape and a magnificent and characteristic tower.

The Fortress Magnificent trapeze shaped castle built by the Cardinal Albornoz in 1300 and finished by Pino Ordella and Caterina Sforza. It has imposing walls and four round bastions in the corners; on the south side you can see an opening on the moat where there once was a drawbridge.

The Civic Archaeological Museum Located in the basement of the Fortress, it is one of the most important museums in Emilia-Romagna as regards the Roman period. In the museum you can see splendid mosaics, sculptures, bronze and glass handmade objects. These are evidence of the Roman origins of the town, probably founded around 132 BC by the consul Popilio Lenate, who gave the name to the town (Forum Popilii).

Events not to be missed At the end of June Artusi Festival; in spring Segavecchia
